The Windows of St James Church Louth

On occasions when I'm guiding in church and there is a lull in visitors to show round I quite often spend time looking at the windows. Now I have to admit they don't catch my immediate interest apart from the great east window and the west window. I spend time pointing out to visitors the large cross embedded into its structure.

My mind wanders at times as to what was here before our Victorian and Edwardian stained glass. An old friend of mine, sadly no longer with us, gave me some information written by Goulding. It doesn't enlighten greatly but it does give an insight as to what was here before. So I thought I would share it with you all.

"All the ancient glass has disappeared, but we learn from the notes made by Gervase Holles, circa 1630-4, that there then existed in the windows divers shields of arms, including those of the Welles, of Somercotes, Conisholme and Willughby, as well as several which he could not identify, one being 'a Chevalier in complete armour,' his surcoat gules, on which was a plain cross argent over his breast. In the tower there were arms of Thomas Fitzwilliam, of Mablethorpe, esquire."

Surcoat—a sleeveless garment worn as part of the insignia of an order of knighthood.

Gules— red

Argent—Silver

Now, my grandfather, on mums side, was called Laud Nelson Wells and was born in Somercotes. Guess what I'm going to try and prove—a coat of arms. Well I can dream and you never know.

Enjoy the summer break and see you all in September.

A warm welcome awaits you at St James's

Open Monday to Saturday 10.30am to 4pm

During Revd Matt Harbage's time with us in Louth he was particularly involved with the church of All Saints in South Elkington. His many friends there decided to give him a special gift when he left, which was presented to him by Mr Charles Dobson on 22 April at the service for the whole parish held at St James.

Matt was delighted with his gift and is shown here wearing it - a green stole embroidered with ears of wheat and fields to represent and remind him of the countryside of the Wolds.

Chill Out Church is the theme for this year's fundraising day on Saturday July 21st from 10am to 4pm when we will see the church of St Andrew's buzzing with even more activity than usual. We will be welcoming visitors to enjoy and relax in the building and grounds. There will be stalls including plants, cakes, preserves, live music all day, a raffle and of course our delicious refreshments. One stall will feature interesting items for sale including Coalport figurines. If you have never been to Stewton Church, here is a wonderful opportunity to meet the people and get a feel for what we do. Why not come and see what a delightful little place it is at the end of Stewton Lane in the heart of the countryside.

Services for July are on 1st, 15th, 29th at 11am when there will be Holy Communion.

The new warden at St James's Church, Diane Thompson, has asked the Herald to advertise a link to a website that St James's now uses to promote all our musical events.

Dave Larder has set up a site called 'Lincolnshire Arts and Music Bulletin'. Diane has been working with him to establish a page dedicated to St James's. Readers will find all upcoming events and eventually a blog about what is happening in the Church. The site is a relatively new resource and is promoted by local radio stations, on Facebook and Twitter, and is looking at forming a working relationship with the Guardian newspaper to promote all things Lincolnshire.

Some notes from the Rectory... How can we experience God? In the last two articles I have shared a few thoughts about how we can look again at the purpose of the Church in order that when we encounter the familiar story of our Lord's death, passion and resurrection we can – perhaps – look afresh at how it speaks to us as 'church'. In May I outlined how we might be challenged to look again at where we draw the boundaries of the Church – challenging us to look beyond the easy categories of church-going to reflect on the more varied ways in which people encounter God in the gospels and beyond. June's article tried to look through a different lens at how those things which should help people recognise the grace of God in their lives can instead become barriers which act as gateways into the church. On the assumption that these barriers are not necessarily a good thing, this evening I would like to take a different viewpoint again and look at what might be the characteristics of a life shaped by the grace of God and in which continued growth in the love of God may be nurtured.

Whilst the last instalments have seen me use various biblical images this evening I will start with looking at the wisdom of the Church. This is not to say that I am abandoning the scriptures this evening, because the early fathers of the Church were saturated in it and it permeates all they say and write – rather, the wisdom of the early Christians may have something to say to us as we contemplate a world which has moved beyond Christendom – where we can no longer assume that all are churchgoers, but where we can still consider many are open to the Christian message.

If one looks at the wisdom of these early fathers – whether it be Gregory, Benedict, Augustine, or any other of a range of people who wrote advice on living a Christian life, we can almost always find that they boil the journey of a Christian disciple into maintaining a balance between several different facets of the spiritual life. Whilst they divide it up in different ways, the following pattern might be reasonably common, with the disciple striving to balance (at whatever depth) the following angles of spiritual practice and growth:

- A life of prayer and worship, in which we open our hearts to God;
- Sharing a life of fellowship, reflected in the eating of common meals;
- Study of God's word, and what that means for the practice of our lives; and
- Labour for God, in service to others by which God is known in the world.

If we are to encourage people to grow in their response to the Grace of God, then we need to help them talk, step-by-step to grow in each of these areas. Whilst it is possible to someone to grow deeply in prayer, this is only of limited value if it does not connect to the word of God, or is not shared in common with others, and if it has no reflection in the daily life of that person. In the same way, it is wonderful if someone does a huge amount of good work in the community, but this is not a full manifestation of the love of God unless it echoes the love and grace of God, if it is not grounded in prayer and if it done in isolation from other parts of the body that is Christ's. And so on...

Each member of the body of Christ needs to grow in each of these areas. There may be patterns which we are used to, but each of us is likely to find that at least one area could benefit from further devotion. Whilst this pattern is commonly seen in the 'Rules' of monastic life, and reflected in the obligations that are placed on clergy when they make their ordination vows, each of us, and each person touched by the grace of God needs to shape them it fit our lives so that they become our response to the grace and love of God that touches our hearts. And whilst we might stand with Martin Luther in agreeing that rules for rules sake are of little use, there is a significant element of wisdom (not to say following in the example of the psalms and the teaching of Christ) to have some discipline to our spiritual lives. So how do you pray and worship? How is your heart open to God, and what is the pattern of your response to God in your life? How do you share in fellowship with others? How do you gather to break bread with fellow disciples? How do you encounter God's word? How do you deepen your relationship with God? And how does God's love and grace affect your daily life? How do you serve God in his world?

None of this need be difficult, though it may be challenging. And none of us will already be there. But once we have started to grow in each of these ways of living within the body of Christ, how can we encourage others to grow alongside us? This is not how do we get people to do the same as us, but how do we encourage others to grow in each of these areas, so that they recognise the love and grace of God in their lives, where they are, and in the way that God himself calls them?

So let us seek the wisdom to discover the grace of God our lives and the lives of all people. Then the church might truly become the body of Christ, 'who is its head'. These thoughts were first shared at the Holy Week Meditation on the Tuesday of Holy Week, and were subsequently discussed at a Retreat for Ministry Team members at Ampleforth Abbey. Over the months and years that lie ahead we hope that we can redraw the boundaries of the Church so that we live out a church life that echoes the example we are given by Christ. Please join in both this work, and the prayer and reflection that will be necessary for us to discern where Christ calls us to be the body of Church.
